Rose Cora Perry Update

London rock singer/guitarist Rose Cora Perry tells Scene her band, The Truth Untold, has achieved a number of significant milestones lately. On January 23 the group performed at the legendary Whisky A Go-Go in Hollywood, Calif. and also attended the National Association of Music Merchants (NAMM) show in Anaheim. In addition, Cora Perry and her drummer Tyler Randall, received endorsement deals with UK's Blackstar Amplification and Mapex Canada. In fact, Cora Perry is the first Canadian female endorsee of Blackstar Amplification. When asked why Blackstar has become her amp of choice, she explains:

"The cleans are deliciously crisp and the distortion roars! For a rhythm player such as myself whose songwriting heavily involves dynamic changes, being able to easily navigate between distinct tonal differences – without the use of multiple pedals – is essential. I adore my Blackstar and can't imagine playing anything else." As a long-time user of the Mapex Saturn series, Randall is honoured to officially represent the company and was happy to elaborate on why Mapex is his brand of choice.

"As a drummer, I'm very particular about my sound. I've tried out a variety of kits by the major brands, but nothing compares to the resonance of the maple walnut-hybrid shells of the Saturn. The highs cut through while the lows pack a punch."
